Note:

In 1943, C. G. Boerner sold a Genelli drawing possibly identical to the one found in the Schwabing Art Trove. While the catalogue description of subject, medium and size (Skizze eines laufenden Knaben, 21.5 x 29 cm) is very similar to the work in the Schwabing Art Trove, there is no illustration to verify the match. The notion of the two works being one and the same is strongly supported by the fact that the auction lot number (280) is inscribed on verso of the cardboard backing on which the Schwabing work is mounted.

In the 1943 catalogue, the Boerner work is referred to as having originated in the erstwhile collection of Arnold Otto Meyer (1825–1913) of Hamburg. The reference to this provenance might hypothetically be an indication that the Boerner sheet was stamped with Meyer's collector's mark [Lugt no. L.1994]. However, since the Meyer collection was disseminated through C. G. Boerner three decades earlier (in 1914), the reference to the former provenance may equally have been company knowledge.

The consignor of the Boerner drawing in 1943 is referred to anonymously in the catalogue as "Besitz B<sub>3</sub> (165)". This provenance is given for well over 300 lots. According to the published auction results, the sheet was sold for 150 reichmarks.
